"What makes a great holiday for teenagers?"

It highly depends on the teenager's personality: some prefer loud and crowded parties, or climbing a mountain, or camping in the forest without any connection to civilization, while others would love to stay home and play videogames or visit a museum or simply sleep and relax. It's really important to consider teenager's opinion when planning family holidays, otherwise you'll get a grumpy teenager with you who'll complain about everything.

~~But~~ It's really hard for families with two or more kids to accommodate to everyone's needs. My family is a perfect example: my older sister is really active, she can't even stay in one place for too long meanwhile I can stay in one room all day doing something like crocheting or reading. But an apple never falls far from the tree, right? So my mom, as an another quiet person of the family was staying with me while dad and my sister were having fun exploring the world and being reckless.

In conclusion, I'd say that there's no universal type of holiday activities that will suit all teenagers. Everyone is different and that's okay. There's no point to be like others. We should embrace our unique traits, not be embarrassed by them. /201
